My name is Sam, and I'm a fairly new member here. I am very appreciative for the information shared here! I am wondering if anyone can give me advice on where to start to minimize my 'training' time and prepare for my first 3X3 class? I'm looking to get into jiu jitsu around January, so do I need to start doing BJJ now? Will my jiu jitsu improve from being in my current weight class? Will having someone working on me help? I want to work on BJJ, cardio, and health overall. I'm guessing most people probably already know all this info, but I figured I'd just share it. Thanks! You may want to start with grappling classes to get your guard working. I think an average class would be five to seven five to seven minute rounds. There's not much time for sparring, because of all the drills and the straight-on-sparring. An average class is 1 hour and 5-10 minutes. If you don't know where to start, let me know. I think my first school will be full-on Brazilian Jiu-Jitsu. For about $2,000, I can get my jiu-jitsu and my wrestling. Other than that, they charge about $150 a class for adults. This is the part that I don't know. If I learn how to move around properly and know all the techniques, will I be better than someone who knows only how to pass a guard? What about someone who does a leglock once a month, but hasn't really gotten to know the techniques? All I know is that, from the books, all the books, and most of the people I've talked to, it's a competitive sport, and it's very physical. It may be beneficial to have someone working on you while you're trying to learn the things that come natural to me (how to pass the guard, escape the leglock, etc.) What about learning different techniques? For instance, would a high school wrestler be better off learning some bjj, or a "no nonsense" jiu jitsu class? This is the part that I don't know. If I learn how to 82157476af
